

New journal: Indo-European linguistics

Indo-European linguistics (IEL) is a new, double-blind peer-reviewed journal devoted to the study of the Indo-European languages from the perspective of modern linguistics. It provides a venue for synchronic or diachronic linguistic studies of the older Indo-European languages and the Indo-European family as a whole, within any theoretical or analytical framework. IEL welcomes submissions dealing with phonetic, phonological, morphological, syntactic, semantic, and pragmatic aspects of the older Indo-European languages; historical studies of any of the Indo-European languages or branches, including problems related to the reconstruction of proto-Indo-European; typological investigations, including those which make use of data from non-Indo-European languages; and research which draws upon the findings of language acquisition, cognitive science, variationist sociolinguistics, or language contact. Contributions with a focus on more 'traditional' topics such as sound change or etymology, but which have ramifications for linguistic theory or general issues of language use, acquisition, and change, are likewise encouraged.

IEL will be published by Brill Academic Publishers in both print and electronic form. The electronic form will be open access for the first five years of the journal's publication. The print form will appear once per year as a volume of ca. 300 pages. The electronic version of articles will be posted as they are ready for publication.

General Editors:

Joseph F. Eska (Blacksburg)

Ronald Kim (Poznan)

Editorial Board:

Stephen Colvin (London)

Eystein Dahl (Bergen)

Petra Goedegebuure (Chicago)

Olav Hackstein (Munich)

Götz Keydana (Göttingen)

Paul Kiparsky (Stanford)

Masato Kobayashi (Tokyo)

Martin Kümmel (Freiburg)

Rosemarie Lühr (Jena)

H. Craig Melchert (Los Angeles)

Don Ringe (Philadelphia)

Michael Weiss (Ithaca)

The general editors now call for submissions written in English. Please contact either Joseph F. Eska <eska@vt.edu> or Ronald Kim <Ronald.Kim@yahoo.com> to obtain the submission guidelines.